Eco-efficient concrete Aug 29 2022 The use of sealers is a common way of contributing to concrete durability. However, the most common ones are based on organic polymers which have some degree of toxicity. The regulation (EU) 305/2011 related to the construction Products regulation (CPR) emphasizes the need to reduce hazardous substances. Therefore, new low-toxicity forms to increase concrete durability are needed. Recent investigations in the field of biotechnology show the potential of bioinspired materials in the development of low toxic solutions. This chapter reviews current knowledge on the use of bacteria for concrete with enhanced durability. It covers the use of bacteria in concrete admixtures and also biomineralization in concrete surface treatments. Results from practical applications exposed to environmental conditions are still needed in order to confirm the importance of this new approach.
